

GardenArt.com Stocked with Affordable Gift Items as Unique as Your Valentine

Summary – This year do something different for your sweetheart. GardenArt.com features whimsical and practical handmade garden art, sure to delight her.

(San Francisco, CA) January 20, 2009 – Jewelry's expensive, lingerie is risky, chocolate is not conducive to her New Year's resolutions and dinner at her favorite restaurant is a Valentine's Day "given". February 14th is not far away so you better make that reservation for dinner and start thinking about what you'll give your sweetheart this year, sooner rather than later.

If she loves to spend time relaxing on the patio in the evenings or adores tending to her flower gardens, why not make her time outside even more enjoyable? GardenArt.com features handmade gifts for the garden; aesthetic art and functional pieces with an artistic flair are available. Everything is a touch whimsical and most pieces are designed in North America from new and or recycled materials such as glass, steel, ceramic, resin or wood.

GardenArt.com was co-founded by husband and wife team Jason and Molly Davis. The couple, who has shared 20 Valentines Days together, took their shared passion for gardening and handmade art and created a unique online gift store with an emphasis on superior customer service and undeniable affordability.

"We have handmade art starting at $14, so it doesn't have to cost a lot to give your Valentine something beautiful to put on their patio or in their garden to enjoy every day," says Molly Davis, a romantic at heart who met Jason "coincidentally on purpose" after applying for a job at Dominos after seeing him working there in the late 1980s when they were both teenagers.

Love is often in the air at GardenArt.com, not only on Valentine's Day. After Christmas, the Davis's received an email from Raymond L. in Texas that said, "I sent my fiancé three of your butterflies for Christmas. She was so thrilled! There's a story behind that, and your butterflies were perfect. I want to thank you for helping to heal and create an environment of love."

With every purchase, you receive a free ceramic birdhouse so when you order your Valentine something from GardenArt.com, she'll actually receive two gifts this year.
